Ok. After looking at it this morning and talking with Johnson Services, this may be a good application to line the pipe rather than replace it.

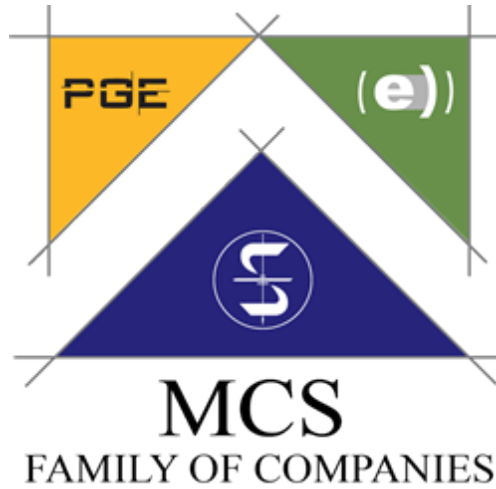

Based upon cost estimates from Johnson, lining would cost between $40-$45/ft to line. Also, it might have been that I rushed a little on that estimate or because I was on my laptop at home, but it looks like I only took into account two block of main replacement rather than the three that would be from 12th to the Highway.

With that being said it is approximately 1250 lineal feet of pipe. At the price above, the project would be $50,000 to $56,250 or roughly half the price of replacement. In addition, the construction would be much less invasive and easier than trying to replace the main in that same location.

What would be your guys' thoughts on that?

Thanks,

Michael Olsen, PE

I was down there this morning measuring depths on the manholes. Can you add it to the agenda and I will have you plans and specs later today?

Thanks,

Thanks for the reminder, Michelle.

I am not going to lie; I probably missed the return email about what the final game plan was and then it slipped through the cracks. However, what I can have for you by early next week is the quick design and specifications.

Thanks,
